Excerpt: . ACT III The same decoration as first act: an arm-chair instead of a sofa. It is night; a lighted lamp stands on the table. SCENE I Pepito listening at the door on the right, then comes back into the middle of the stage. PEPITO. The crisis is past at last. I hear nothing. Poor Don Julian! He s in a sad way. His life hangs in the balance: on one side death awaits him, and on the other another death, that of the soul, of honour--either abyss deeper than hopeless love. The devil! All this tragedy is making me more sentimental than that fellow with his plays and verses. The tune of disaster, scandal, death, treason, and disgrace, hums in my brain. By Jove, what a day, and what a night! and the worst is yet to come. Well, it certainly was madness...
